

SUBJECT: I'm his wife! Not his mother!

Dear Friend,

Has this ever happened to you?

You're walking side-by-side down the street with your beloved husband. And he does look really handsome—even after all these years. Nice little gray around his temples, but very distinguished looking. Then you hear someone calling his name.

Turning around, the two of you see an old college buddy, once known for his wild frat parties and practical jokes. He comes over to say hello and with that familiar grin on his face says, "Hey, John! Good to see you and this must be your mother. You always were a 'momma's boy'."

"I'm his wife! Not his mother!" you exclaim.

The flushed, old college buddy stands stammering and red-faced. This is one time, he wasn't being the practical joker.

Talk about a wake-up call! You never thought your face was that wrinkled. Well, at least you don't have any age spots—yet.

When It Comes to Aging, Women Age. Men Become "Distinguished Looking."

It seems so unfair doesn't it? As 21st Century women, we can feel so young on the inside.

We can even exercise and keep our figures well into our 60's.

We can color our hair to fight some of the aging battle. But when it comes to our faces and necks, nature seems to be winning.

And sadly, you have to wear your face and neck every day. No hiding them under the bed.

As your skin ages, your face and neck are where you notice it the most. Have you noticed:

- The skin around your neck seems to 'wobble' just slightly when you turn your head?
- The parenthesis around your mouth are always there even when you're not smiling?
- The deeply etched wrinkles in your forehead can only be hidden under thick bangs?

Even co-workers tell you to take a vacation, because you "look so tired" all of the time.

Somewhere There Must Be a Miracle Cream!

Every time you hear the word "aging", you become depressed. Didn't Ponce de Leon die before ever finding the Fountain of Youth?

Your bathroom medicine chest and bedroom vanity are overstocked with wrinkle creams, anti-aging cures, and miracle lotions.

While many of them do feel smooth and velvety going on, are they really making you wrinkle-free?

But who can cough up thousands of dollars to have a complete face and neck lift? Your health insurance doesn't cover such a luxury.

And every time you pick up a magazine, there's another aging movie star or singer who still looks the same. Even after 30-some years.

The situation is hopeless. In American society, we worship youth. Even 1950's bombshell, Jane Russell, decided to give up acting after 30. She complained, "Because I was getting old! You couldn't go on acting in those years if you were an actress over 30, honey."

Well, 30 was old in her day. Okay. Well, how many times have you heard that 60 is the new 40? We still worship youth and will make excuses to do so.

So week after week, you stay on the look out for the latest-greatest face cream. Everything from what the local drug store carries to what's on the shelves of that pricey day salon!

Wouldn't it be great to really find out that there is a "fountain of youth" in a jar? That despite all of the bogus claims out there, there actually is one legitimate product that lives up to its name and doesn't cost a small fortune. A cream that can stop new wrinkles dead in their tracks? Then start to pump up the ones you already have?

A cream that isn't loaded with chemicals or fragrances. A cream more on the natural side.

A cream that you could use twice a day and then be on with the rest of your life. And not having to avoid certain mirrors or family photo taking. Or having to remember to smile a certain way to keep the wrinkles from showing.

Well, there is a cream that can and will do just that.
